Why invest in Our Fund?

The Federal Reserve (FED) raised the target range for the federal funds rate by 0.75% to 3.75%-4.5% in December 2022, marking a sixth consecutive rate hike and the fourth consecutive three-quarter point increase, pushing borrowing costs to a new high not seen since 2008. They followed this up with commentary indicating that they could still hike rates going forward amidst stubborn elevated headline inflation. However, the annual inflation rate in the US slowed for the sixth month running to 6.5% in December. Expectations are that the FED will continue to raise rates but at a lower rate for the coming meetings. As such, fixed income asset prices are likely to continue to decline over the near-term, albeit at a slower pace given the likely posture of the FED. This is likely to provide some buying opportunities, especially given the considerable liquidity that is currently maintained by the portfolio. This will benefit investors that are looking for short-term appreciation as well as those with longer time horizons. The 10-year US Treasury eased as low as 3.4% in December after peaking at roughly 4.2% in October. The 10-year US Treasury yield continues to be volatile against uncertain market dynamics.

Looking ahead the investment strategy of the FXB will continue to focus on:

- The purchase of fundamentally sound securities that are poised to perform, due to improving economic circumstances and are resilient to rising interest rates.
- The purchase of more resilient securities with lower price risk (i.e. low duration securities and high quality loans);
